What Death Means for the Believer in Christ | Bible.org

The Cross—Jesus' death and resurrection—was the place of the devil's defeat and our victory. b. Numbers 21:9 KJV — And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.

The Power of The Cross of Jesus Christ

Any message that does not give first place to the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ as the only remedy for our sin does not have the right to be called a Christian gospel. The gospel proclaims that the wisdom and power of God are displayed through the cross and resurrection of Jesus Christ. For further study

The Power of the Cross | Theology | Today in the Word

Irefutably, the cross represented Christ's suffering, death, and resurrection; therefore, a pastor must claim the veracity of this scripture in prayer for the sick with a congregation. In his suffering and resurrection, Jesus manifests the power of God in the believer's life. Relationship Between the Cross and Healing

The Power of the Cross and Healing in Ministry

He comes and disempowers all these things in the emptiness and desolation of His death on the cross. At the hands of the very sinners for whom He dies, Jesus removes the power of human suffering by undergoing all of it Himself and alone. No "god of the gaps" is necessary to fill in the details of the unknown in life, for all things—even suffering and death—are enveloped by the dying and rising of Jesus Christ. In the time that remains, suffering will indeed mark the Christian life.

A theology of the cross defines life in terms of giving rather than taking, self-sacrifice rather than self-protection, dying rather than killing. It reorients us away from our natural inclination toward a theology of glory by showing that we win by losing, we triumph through defeat, and we become rich by giving ourselves away.

Theology of Glory vs. Theology of the Cross - The ...

While the larger notion of the death of Christ may carry a broader and even deeper significance in New Testament theology, the cross as a symbol of God's action in Christ and a motivator for us to follow is worthy of discussion. The cross of Christ is the center of the work that God did in Christ, "reconciling the world to himself" (2 Co 5:19).

Cross, Crucifixion - Baker's Evangelical Dictionary of ...

Stott observes, with approval, that the early Christians made the cross the symbol of their faith because they believed that Jesus' death was the central event of their faith and not the resurrection or any other event in Jesus' life. Stott argues against the possibility that the resurrection is the centre and not the cross [41-50].
