On the Face of the Waters is a novel by English author Flora Annie Steel. It was first published in 1897 when it was hailed by critics as one of the best novels dealing with the Indian Rebellion of 1857. It is divided into five books of six chapters each (except Book II which has seven).

Nuke Spawn Everyone who lives in Deathlands must endure the hellscape of a world mutilated by nukes and madness. Survival is a grim pursuit, achieved only by the most ruthless means. Yet Ryan Cawdor and his companions remain determined to persevere by doing whatever it takes to survive. Death Infestation When a mat-trans malfunction strands Ryan Cawdor and his friends in a gutted redoubt in the West Indies, the crystal waters offer them a tantalizing glimpse of untouched splendor. But the oasis is abruptly shattered by violent and ruthless pirates, and Ryan has to barter with a young guide, a teenage boy on a blood quest against a sadistic local warlord, to navigate a land teeming with predators—mutie, human and animal. The race is on to find a second redoubt, buried deep in the inhospitable heart of Monster Island. As pirates, mutie sec men and monsters converge, the kill zone widens, blood flows...and the group rushes to escape paradise before it destroys them. Because even paradise has claws in Deathlands.

A latest installment in the series that includes Tongues of Serpents continues the fantastical Napoleonic War experiences of Captain Will Laurence and his indefatigable fighting dragon, who travel to South America to negotiate with the Incas as part of a plan to stop the Emperor's campaign for world domination.

"Manuel Erispe is a successful doctor, sensitive intellectual, young, handsome-- a man who would enjoy happiness and fulfillment in any country but the one in which he lives...South Africa. Because of a drop of African blood, Erispe is a "Coloured", a second class citizen forced to live in a physical and spiritual ghetto. Two women try to save him from his almost senseless hatred of Whites --- a Coloured ballet dancer who wants Manuel to marry her and live abroad, and an American nun who by forcing him to admit the origins of his hatred hopes to bring him to a more positive way of life. The first woman gets beaten for her pains, the second raped; and Manuel holds tight to his dream of revenge--a day when the white African will be forced to live as the Coloureds and Blacks do now. Perhaps Manuel Erispe is not an unusual case and indeed one can understand intellectually his personality and position, but the lack of technical skill on the author's part, the crude psychology, the tedious dialogues, the purple patches-- all rob this novel of validity and alienate the hero from the reader."--Kirkus
